

Maggie O'Shea (she/her) is a current PhD student in Dartmouth's Ecology, Evolution, Ecosystems, and Society (EEES) program. She is most interested in research that helps to quantify the socioeconomic costs of climate impacts through linking climate models with tools from economics. Prior to joining Dartmouth, she received her BA in Environmental Studies at Bates College and received her Masters from Duke University where she studied Environmental Economics.